■ 2003 ROC Library Yearbook

Since 1981, the National Central Library has published the ROC Library Yearbook to chronicle the major affairs, events and information of Taiwan's library world. With the exceptions of the 1981, 1988, and 1999 cross-year editions, each volume contains information from the previous year. To date, seven volumes have been published.

The most recently published yearbook is the 2003 edition, which contains information on library events, activities, conferences and other information from the period of January 1 to December 31, 2002. In order to ensure the completeness and coherency of the content, some of the articles contain information from before January 1 and after December 31.

The yearbook is divided into four editorial modules, including reprinted material, special reports, special topics, and general information, as detailed below. There is also an index at the end of the yearbook to help readers find information of interest.

4.1 Reprinted Material: Policy papers, announcements, resolutions, white papers and other articles by government leaders and library and information organizations

4.2 Special Reports: The 2003 yearbook contains articles written by experts and scholars on technology standards for the digitalization of library collections, the current status of digitalization of news video and audio materials in library collections, and the arrangement of rare books and application of information technology.

4.3 Special Topics: This section contains categorized columns on various topics, including library operations overview, the National Central Library, public libraries, university libraries, school libraries, elementary and middle school libraries, specialized libraries and information centers, medical libraries, digital libraries, library and information science (LIS) education, LIS institutes, and library conferences and exchanges. With the exception of the stand-alone articles in the overview, education and research sections, the other information is arranged as topical entries.
